

5 Reasons your Website will Not convert

Learn how to turn visitors on your website into clients

Effortless.Marketing

The majority of prospects and clients start looking for a service or a product by doing a web search. The lion's share of that traffic goes to the web sites found on the first page of Google.

You would think that if your website is on Google's first page, prospects should pour in.

There are 2 ways to get on the first page of Google.

- By natural, organic search. Meaning, your website is optimized for the search engines and has an SEO (search engine optimization) strategy that will continue keeping the site on the first page.
- Paid advertizing PPC (pay per click). You pay for your website to show up on the first page of Google under sponsored ads. Once you stop paying your site will stop showing...not the best deal in the long run.

Lots of businesses throw time and money trying to get their website a first page. The problem is - once they get there, nothing happens (or not much). All too often, local business owners find that valuable 'page 1' traffic doesn't always turn into a stream of customers.

Yes, traffic goes up, but those new visitors just don't turn into prospects and customers.

Is this where you are? Stuck on the first page, counting all the visitors not converting into customers?

Your website's main purpose is to bring you new prospect and leads so you can convert them into paying customers. You made it look great, filled it with valuable information, you may have even loaded it with everything a prospect would know about your products and services. You may be proud of it, but the sad truth is: It's not working.

In short: If your web site doesn't convert, then it's not doing its job and you may be wasting a lot of good traffic.

If that's the case, don't despair. Non-converting sites share some common problems and most are easy to correct. If you analyze enough poor performing sites you will generally find the same errors over and over.

Here are the top 5 reasons website won't convert.

You may recognize a few that may be hurting your conversions. If so, they can be corrected.

1. Mistake One: Confusing and Distracting Visitors

A common misconception: thinking you only get one chance to sell your customers, so everything possible goes on the page. It seems like a good idea – why not cast the widest net.

But, what happens when people come to your site? What they are looking for is lost among all the clutter. Internet searchers are impatient, and if they don't see what they want in 8 seconds or less, they hit the 'back' button. When that happens, you've lost them for good.

Let's make your pages meet that 8-second rule...

Scientific eye-tracking studies have shown that readers can't, or won't, read blocks of text. Since they won't read it anyway, reduce that text to bullets as much as you can.

Your pages must be easy to scan for the important information people want to know about.

- What you do
- Where you do it
- A few bullet points about your service
- Your phone number or other contact information

Well-designed graphics catch the eye and tell a story at a glance, so a picture is worth more than a thousand words.

Each service or product you want to promote needs its own 'landing' page – a page devoted to one product or service.

Each page should have one clear message – other messages should go on other pages.

Your site will be cleaner this way, you focus attention on each specific offer, and you control what the user sees.

Making your pages more focused also helps people find your offers easier when they search for you. The search engines rank pages, not web sites. A focused message makes it easier for the search engines to understand the main point of each page and rank it accordingly.

Each focused (or 'optimized') page, concentrating on a single topic will be found easier by the search engines and by your prospects who are looking for your services or products.

This way people looking for a solution to their problem will be brought directly to your page showing them your solution and offer. Bring the right people to the right page and you will convert more of your visitors into buyers.

2. Mistake Two: Hiding Important Information

As we said above, if people can't find what they want quickly, they move on. They won't spend the time to look and read through a lot of information. Most of us skim through a page and only stop if something catches our attention and even then if it's too hard to read we'll move on.

Decide what your page is supposed to say to your customer, and then say it.

Make it easy to find your name, location and your hours of operation, the key points of your service or product and, most importantly, your phone number.

Local consumers look for a phone number, so make sure it is prominent.

Graphic elements stand out, so instead of your address in small type, embed a Google map on your page. It makes sharing your location easy and obvious.

3. Mistake Three: Forgetting To Tell Visitors What To Do

When a visitor arrives at your site, they have no idea what you want them to do. You have to tell them what it is you want from them.

Each page has a desired outcome, and you need to let them know what you expect them to do.

Use 'active voice'! Speak to your prospects directly. Too many people write in 'passive voice' instead of 'active voice'. They start sentences with 'If interested...' or other 'soft' language. They are afraid of scaring people away with direct speech and, as a result, leave a soft message.

You have people on your site, and they have come for what you have to offer. Come on out and tell them what you have for them and want you them to do. Assume they are interested – otherwise, they wouldn't be there!

Do you want them to call?
Then put that down in big bold type.

Do you want them to fill in a form to get a free report?

Tell them what they will get in return, and put an arrow pointing out the form.

Label the button CLICK HERE and they will.

And the most important piece of information is your phone number – spell it out in big, bold letters

“CALL 555-1234 TODAY”

One of the best ways to accomplish these calls to action is with Landing Pages. They won't disrupt your current site and front page placement but will allow you to direct visitors to very specific offers and actions.

4. Mistake Four: Sending Visitors Off Your Site

Once you get people to your site, you want to keep them there, on your 'money page', until they pick up the phone, fill out a form, or click the 'Buy' button.

Offer as few distractions at this point as possible – focus on converting this visitor into your next customer.

Navigation links, YouTube videos and related blog posts are all great ways to get people to your site. That is their purpose – to bring people to your sales page.

But, once they are on your site, the rules change. Now the goal is to keep them there until they become a prospect or customer.

Anything on these pages that doesn't support the sale you have in progress has got to go! Links to other pages, other offers, how to videos or anything that can send them away WILL send them away so get rid of that stuff.

A good sales video on your landing page is a proven sales tool, and YouTube has made it easy for anyone to make and post videos online.

Embedding a video on your website is also easy, and your pages will be easier to find (Google owns YouTube and favors YouTube videos). And what better way to tell people about your business than a video?

Make sure you Disable Related Videos on YouTube

before you embedded your Video onto your website.

Otherwise it will take users to 'related videos' once it has played.

One of the easiest ways to communicate with your prospects is through offering a freebie, information your prospect may be interested in. It works, people will give their email address in exchange for the information they are looking for. When they sign up you can add them to your email list and to your email marketing campaign.

This should not be used to constantly email them sales offers, but to enable you to communicate and provide them valuable information and educate them about your products and services.

Most businesses bury their valuable information deep within their website in the form of an article or page content. When you position your information as report with an attractive cover your prospect will perceive this information as important and valuable. This will also build credibility and trust for your business by positioning you as the "Educator / Advocate" by providing this valuable gift.

The best way to offer your information in the form of a complementary report is through a landing page that is focused squarely on the report content and a strong "Call To Action" for the visitor to enter their email address in return for instant access of the information.

At this point you have now turned a visitor into a prospect who you can follow up with and convert into a client.

5. Mistake Five: A Failure To Communicate

Your customers don't want to deal with a faceless, anonymous websites.

They want to deal with real people like them, not a just a website. You need to become real. Make sure you have contact information, including your address, phone number, and links to your social media profiles

Social Media - your business page on Facebook, Instagram, Twitter or LinkedIn lets prospects know you are a real business with real people behind it. Knowing who they are dealing with helps establish their sense of trust in both you and your business.

About Page - Make sure you're about page is more than just what your business has to offer. Ensure that your about page shares the faces and tell stories of those who are in your business or simply about you. Share pictures and show off your brand.
